Global Surgery and Public Health: A New Paradigm

Despite such a surgical imbalance around the world, surgery is still "the neglected stepchild of global health". 4 No global funding organization focuses specifically on the provision of surgical care, and none of the major donors are willing to support and acknowledge surgery as an imperative part of global public health. This is largely due to the following common misperceptions about surgery that are not grounded in truth.

Thanks in part to successful national and global public health programs (and in part to broader, if uneven, economic trends), deVries and Price predict a changing demographic with decreases in global deaths from communicable causes (acute respiratory infections, AIDS, malaria) and con- comitant and significant increases in deaths due to noncommunicable causes (cancer, cardiac and vascular disease, trauma, and birth defects).

Global Surgery and Public Health

The recognition of both surgery and anaesthesia as key areas in the global health debate is comparatively recent, and surgical conditions and treatments remain poorly recognised as a public health priority. 110 Public health and infectious diseases have developed an evidence base to underpin future work, and while this remains in relative infancy for both surgery and anaesthesia, research studies in the field are now driving development of future interventional projects. 25 26

What is 'global surgery'? Defining ... - BMJ Global Health

Only recently has surgery been brought to the table, being called the "forgotten step-child" of global health by Paul Farmer and others. At the core, global surgery is "a field that aims to improve health and health equity for all who are affected by surgical conditions or have a need for surgical care, with a particular focus on underserved populations in countries of all income levels, as well as populations in crisis, such as those experiencing conflict, displacement, and disaster."

GSSA | What is global surgery?

Surgical care is often perceived as too expensive to implement, but is similarly cost-effective to currently implemented non-surgical routine interventions. The World Health Organization aims to advance the status of surgical care in global public health and coordinate plans to address the unfulfilled surgical burden.
