Life in a Medieval Castle by Joseph Gies - Goodreads

Castle life, even for the upper class, would not have been all that glamorous. Dark and gloomy rooms, lit and heated by suffocatingly smoky fires, were par for the course. While the upper class did indulge in some of the finer food and drink of the Middle Ages and were afforded a little more privacy than the serving class, there were still certainly very few creature comforts in medieval castle living.

What Life Was Like In Medieval Castles - Ranker

Sometimes castles with ground-floor halls had their great chamber, where the lord and lady slept, in a separate wing at the dais end of the hall, over a storeroom, matched at the other end, over the buttery and pantry, by a chamber for the eldest son and his family, for guests, or for the castle steward.

Life in the Medieval castle of the first period of Feudalism was rough and laborious, characterized by monotony and loneliness. It was much affected by the vicissitudes of those insecure times. The Medieval castles owners had little time to devote to the pleasures of private life.

Medieval Castle Life

The main purpose of a medieval castle was defensive. It was a fort built strong enough to withstand military attack. Potential attacks could be from fire, gunshot, explosion or even tunneling beneath the castle walls. To minimize such risks, castles were built where it was possible to get a wide (360 degree) view of surrounding countryside.
