The paradox he addresses in Making the Social World is that these facts only exist because we think they exist and yet they have an objective existence. Continuing a line of investigation begun in his earlier book The Construction of Social Reality, Searle identifies the precise role of language in the creation of all "institutional facts." His aim is to show how mind, language and civilization are natural products of the basic facts of the physical world described by physics, chemistry and ...

Ok, so I may have said that many of today's proclaimed social businesses, aren't social and I stand by that assertion 100%. Having said that, the quest for social business isn't unattainable, but it does take work to achieve. Before I jump into the constructs for a successful social business, let's just take a quick crash course as to why a business wants to be social.
